

I frequently use the 430MHz band for satellite communications. Since satellite transmitters are generally limited to low power due to the satellite solar power supply limitations and the signals must travel hundreds of miles to my ground station, they arrive at a very low signal strength. This rule change will likely result in unnecessary RF noise that will disrupt satellite communications in the amateur radio bands.